

The Ethics of Research with Children and Young People Research Cluster

I am pleased to announce this year's activities for the Ethics of Research with Children and Young People's research cluster, part of Research Methods@SHU. The cluster is for researchers of all levels, from post-graduate to professor who have an interest in conducting research with children and young people.

For enquiries or if you would like to attend please contact:

Navigating the Ethical Dilemmas of Research with Children and Young People: Seminar series

These seminars are intended to support researchers understand the fundamental principles of conducting research with children and young people. We will also look at examples of innovative research methods and discuss their practical challenges. There will be the opportunity to discuss ideas with colleagues, share experiences and forge connections across different disciplines. All seminars take place 12-1pm on the following dates:

Thursday 14th October: Why Include Children in Research?

Tuesday 9th November: Collaboration or exploitation? An introduction to the ethics

January*: Asking children questions

February*: Unconventional research methods with children

March*: Collaborative interpretation of data with children

* The dates for the seminars in Semester 2 will be confirmed once the teaching timetable is in place.

Ethics of Research with Children and Young People: Drop in sessions

Monthly drop in sessions are held on Zoom to provide an informal space where people can bring up any challenges or ideas they would like to discuss in relation to the ethics of research with children and young people. There is no fixed agenda, so feel free to bring your lunch and join in for an informal chat with like-minded people!

The sessions in 2021/22 will be held between 12 and 1 pm on:

- Tuesday 12th October
- Thursday 11th November

The dates for the drop in sessions in Semester 2 will be confirmed once the teaching timetable is in place.
