

The Hallam Guild

The Hallam Guild is designed to Create: a cross-university network of staff, scholars, students, and alumni with shared goals, expertise and common interests.

Build: new communities of experts based on the mutual exchange of experience, knowledge, skills and practice.

Enable: creative approaches to enhancing teaching excellence which transcend departmental, faculty, and disciplinary boundaries.

Give: voice and opportunities to all who wish to engage with the Guild in a collegial environment.

Our Aims

The Hallam Guild supports the University by investing in the establishment of a strong professional community focused on building and sharing best practice.

We do this by:

- Creating a cross-university community of staff and students with shared goals and common interests.
- Embedding a culture of educational excellence in the University by investing in the establishment of a strong professional academic community.
- Building and sharing best practice.
- Engaging with students.
- Enhancing our reputation by strengthening connections with other universities and creating a system of knowledge exchange.
- Providing a home for teaching excellence.

Engaging with people

We have 350 active members including alumni and those from outside the University.

We provide a collaborative space where staff and students can engage in activities designed to enhance teaching excellence and the student experience.

We have funded 33 University wide groups and 19 projects themed across eight areas:

- Building Communities;
- Developing Pedagogic Expertise;
- Enabling Equity;
- Enhancing Employability;
- Leading research;
- Inspiring Reading and Writing;
- Supporting Students;
- Promoting Wellbeing.

Building connections

The Guild provides a collaborative space where staff and students can be engaged in activities designed to enhance teaching excellence and the student experience.

All our projects and groups are collaborations between staff and students, are cross-institution or are delivered with external partners.

Our project and group leads share best practice across the University and engage nationally and internationally with students, academics, practitioners and policy makers.

By funding projects and groups we have given people the opportunity to deliver and embed good practice across the University.

Adding impact to what we do

We have a fully operational website

<https://blogs.shu.ac.uk/hallamguild>, launched in September 2018.

Our website has already had 3000 views with half of these leading to further engagement in the Guild.

Over 50 cross-university events have been delivered with over 1000 engagements from staff and students.

Over 200 staff and students attended our Launch and 120 attended Guildfest.

Building our University's reputation

We have used the Hallam Guild website, alongside a strong digital communications strategy to promote our work. This has helped to develop our reputation as a centre of excellence in teaching and learning.

We have enhanced our existing local, national and international networks and established new ones enabling us to share best practice within and beyond the University.

Through our targeted funding we have ensured that our staff and students can help support wider strategic institutional priorities.

Engaging with students

We have engaged students in all our projects and groups. This has enabled them to help shape their learning experiences.

We have empowered students to build their skills and expertise; fifteen students have been directly employed across our groups and projects.

We have worked closely with the Students Union.

Building global connectedness

Our staff engage in local, national and international knowledge exchange, pedagogical research, quality enhancement and student engagement.

This increased connectedness has supported the development of expertise and excellence in teaching and learning.

We have worked with partners renowned for their expertise in policy and pedagogy, placing Sheffield Hallam at the centre of cutting-edge developments in teaching and learning.
