SKILLS FOR LEARNING AND LIFE

Ground Rules

Ground rules articulate how group members should treat each other and are most effective when drawn up and agreed to by the group rather than being imposed by others.

It is helpful to remind group members to periodically review their ground rules to ensure they are working and make adjustments as necessary. If problems with the group do occur the ground rules can be referred back to.

Example rules:

- Do not monopolize discussion
- Critique ideas, not people
- Technology (phones/laptops etc) should only be for work purposes
